Of Lay Offs, RIFs and Closures

If you are one of the many folks losing their jobs in 2009 or you know someone who has lost their job or you are in a company or division in a company that will be closed you are not alone!

So many folks we know will be or have been told they will no longer have a job soon.

We have several recommendations for you but most important of all please call us or find someone you can express your feelings to about your situation.

The number one reason people don't get hired when interviewed is they still have residual feelings about their situation that somehow seep into the interview.

I know some of you think you are great at suppressing and denying your feelings but trust me you aren't that good an actor!

If you want to talk with us we'll be available to listen.

Second Network with everyone you can. Don't hide get out there and meet people in person! Conversely don't avoid friends and coworkers who have lost jobs because you feel uncomfortable.

Go to meetings of professional organizations you haven't been to in years. Go to your house of worship and make sure you greet everyone you know. Go to alumni functions and have lunch, coffee or just a conversation with folks who can put you in front of the right person. Job search is a volume game. The more contacts the better!

Third send us your resume so we can send it out to folks we know who may be looking for someone. We don't guarantee any results but it does get you circulated.

Fourth open up your possibilities in your own mind and with your family. Maybe you will need to move or change focus as a family to make things happen.

Fifth if you haven't been to Managing Corporate Change or if you need an update on the skills of identifying and resolving emotional reactions, requesting or possibility thinking attend Managing Change March 24-26 in New Jersey or bring it into your company to assist the folks you know need the support.

We want to help you get through before you feel at risk or before the people you manage feel at risk!

Call and let us support you!

Check our Public Workshop Schedule below for additional 2009 course information.
